The monthly e-newsletter of Rachel's Vineyard Ministries

April 2014

Rachel's Vineyard weekend retreats for emotional and spiritual healing after abortion are held internationally. Rachel's Vineyard welcomes women, men, couples, grandparents and former abortion providers. Our retreats are held in both Catholic and Interdenominational settings. Rachel's Vineyard Ministries is a resource for clinical training, education, and healing models.

Rachel's Vineyard is a non-profit 501(c) 3 organization. All contributions are tax deductible. We work in partnership with Priests for Life and Gospel of Life Ministries.

Rachel's Vineyard Ministries is available on the web at www.RachelsVineyard.org and through our 24/7 help line 1-877-HOPE-4-ME.

IMPORTANT UPDATE:

We have just made the difficult decision to postpone the 2014 Rachel's Vineyard Leadership Conference, scheduled for July 21 – 24, 2014 in Malvern, PA. While this is a disappointment to those who have looked forward to our conference, we are excited to announce that we're developing our educational outreach for licensure that will offer online training. This training will be offered over the internet and will lead to levels of licensing for those who use our treatment models. These classes will enhance the team member's ability to facilitate retreats.

This decision will make it possible for those throughout the world, who do not have the financial resources to attend our conference, to be trained using our online educational program.

Please keep these exciting efforts in your prayers.

Prison Break from Shame and Guilt: Testimony from a Man Serving a Life Sentence

By Kevin Burke

This is David's Story:

I started college at age 17 and found a job at a sporting goods store to pay my tuition. I was a successful high school athlete and knew sports, apparel and their related equipment thoroughly. I also had the arrogant swagger common to popular teenage athletes. I met Jessica when she came into the store, and we fell into a casual sexual relationship.

My mother is a devout Catholic, and my father was a convert to the Catholic faith. Though I knew right from wrong, it was a passing comment, from my not-so-devout father that muddied the moral waters for me. In the context of a basketball game, he told me that it was not a foul unless the referee blows the whistle.

Sadly, I understood this to mean that it is not wrong unless you are caught. So religious faith and spirituality were for Sunday mornings, and from Sunday afternoon through the rest of the week, I lived by the subjective moral standards set by the rest of the secular world.

Though I avoided drug and alcohol abuse I had no trouble developing an addiction to other vices: gossiping, cursing, holding grudges, dwelling on vengeful thoughts...and womanizing. All of this behavior led to me developing a very self-centered system of priorities that eroded my ability to love my neighbor. I passed myself off as a civilized gentleman, until it was opportune for me to behave otherwise. This caused a split in my personality.

I was sitting at home on a weekday afternoon when the phone call came. It was Jessica...she told me she was pregnant.

Instantly the thought that abortion is wrong flashed through my mind. Apparently I had not yet killed my conscience entirely. I told her we could take care of the child. She told me that she did not want to carry the child and that she needed four hundred dollars to have the abortion. I was going to argue further, yet her boyfriend then got on the phone.

It is difficult to put into words the rage I felt flare up when I heard him on the phone. It felt like an ambush. I told them that I did not have the money. As they continued to push, I pushed back and told them that it was not my problem but theirs. Then I attacked her, "You knew what you were getting into. I don't know why he is even sticking around."

Later, as what was left of my conscience chided me for allowing her to go through with the abortion, I justified myself by saying that I had nothing to do with it.

After the abortion, anger became my constant companion. I tried to continue with schooling but it did not take long for me to lose track. Violent thoughts lived in my mind day and night. I took unnecessary risks, such as racing, lashing out and fighting others.

Danger and risk became synonymous with a good time. Adrenaline and caffeine became my bread and water. I still attended church on Sunday, because it was expected of me, and in spite of my chaotic interior life and lifestyle, I still thought it important to live a portion of my life by societal norms.

The divide in my life grew wider. Before long, I was one person during the day with certain acquaintances and friends, and a completely different person at night and with different acquaintances.

My academic plans in college — to complete a pre-med program and obtain a degree in psychiatry — finally collapsed under the stress of my double life. Long-term goals became obsolete and I lived my life day-to-day. Relationships began to suffer.

One of the men I spent time with on my ludicrous escapades came to me with another wild idea. The plan was criminal in the extreme.

Finally, the fruit of passive-participation in the killing of my child ripened within me. I participated in the murder and robbery of a man, the wounding of another, and the near death of a young woman at the scene of the crime. It did not take long for the police to arrest me.

When sitting in the county jail a grace filled moment occurred. I realized that I had hit rock bottom. But remorse for my crimes and sins did not flood me, though I did recognize just how insane my behavior was. When sent to prison, I continued to look at the bizarre split in my life and the chasm that existed in my lifestyles.

This, and God's grace, brought me back to His Church, and I began to recognize how my sinful actions created this split personality. In walking with Jesus through my memories and past actions, I began to understand remorse, guilt, and healthy shame. However, no matter how much I prayed, no matter how much I fasted, and no matter how much I sacrificed, I suffered these demons of self-doubt and pride.

Finally, the Holy Spirit brought the phone call from Jessica to mind. I became overwhelmed with the sense that this wound was the source of my suffering and struggle. I prayed for God to forgive me and I went to confession about the sin I committed against God, my child, Jessica, and myself. Still I struggled.

At weekly services the Catholic chaplain polled 100 inmates to see how many men had gone through an abortion experience.

A surprise came when I learned that more than 90% of the men around me were involved in an abortion decision. Later, the chaplain announced that the Rachel's Vineyard program was coming to our institution to help heal the wound of the abortion.

The seminar answered my deepest prayers. It showed me how my self-image and core beliefs were warped by the abortion, my self-justifications, and my denial. I came to recognize that the need to overachieve, my obsession with detail, my propensity for anger and violence, and even my hunger for adrenaline excitement were rooted in my corrupted idea of masculinity.

My consent in the abortion of my daughter was a violation of my natural purpose to protect and provide for my offspring. When this occurred, the split in my personality was a defense mechanism that allowed me to exercise denial, so that I would not have to feel the pain of my decision. This denial was forcing me to overcompensate for the damage I caused to my natural masculine identity. The problem was that this denial also meant that I was denying everything that made me human.

It was a suffering joy when I came to know my heavenly daughter, Angela Grace. I had been unaware of just how callous and unfeeling I was, but through the healing received by God in the Rachel's Vineyard seminar, it allowed me to feel. I came to know myself, my wrongs, and experience a remorse that is difficult to express adequately — painful to feel, yet liberating to know.

Rachel's Vineyard is the grace that God ordained for my healing, and the healing of so many others. Though I justly remain in prison for my crimes, Rachel's Vineyard has been the vessel of grace by which God has made me free. It is in this freedom that I will now be...Silent No More.

[David has been transformed by his ongoing conversion which began with his incarceration and blossomed after his Rachel's Vineyard experience. He is truly growing in holiness, and you can see this clearly as he reflects the love of Christ and shares that love in practical ministry with his fellow prisoners. David and 3 other inmates are being mentored as team members for the next Rachel's Vineyard program in the prison under the leadership of Donna Gardner and Thomas Lawlor of the Palm Beach Diocese Catholic Charities. Over 60 inmates have experienced spiritual and emotional healing through their Rachel's Vineyard groups. However I was honored to stand with the women and men of the Silent No More Awareness Campaign at the steps of the Supreme Court at the close of the March for Life, January 22 2014 and share this testimony. – Kevin Burke, LSW]

"An individual who breaks a law that conscience tells him is unjust, and who willingly accepts the penalty of imprisonment in order to arouse the conscience of the community over its injustice, is in reality expressing the highest respect for the law."

- Martin Luther King, Jr.

"Bro-Choice" Breaks Down Published by Life Issues Connector

Abortion advocates have long clung to the phrase "women's rights" to monopolize abortion as only a women's issue. Men's perspectives on abortion have been largely discounted or even silenced. However, now those on the pro-abortion side have abandoned that philosophy in favor of a new catchphrase, "bro-choice."

The bro-choice movement is a campaign started by the pro-abortion advocacy group, Choice USA. Its goal is to mobilize men to take a stand and "disrupt the dominant narrative that [abortion] is exclusively a 'women's issue.'" The movement calls on men to advocate for policy change (push the abortion agenda); challenge media messages (make abortion a men's issue too) and change campus culture (encourage other men to be bro-choice). The campaign was widely embraced by NARAL, Planned Parenthood and other pro-abortion groups. In an article published by the abortion-friendly RH Reality Check, bro-choicer, Andrew Jenkins explains how enlisting men is essential for the future of "reproductive rights." He emphasizes that this isn't about "saving our mothers, sisters and daughters." No, he considers that to be sexist. Instead, he insists that this is a matter of understanding men's own self-interest. That selfish motivation opened the floodgates for what came next.

Men in favor of abortion embraced the bro-choice movement. And they certainly were outspoken about their "self-interests." Bro-choice proved to become a gathering of crude and immature males only concerned with their ability to have casual sex without the consequence of becoming a parent.

Pro-abort blogger, Ben Sherman was troubled by the abortion restrictions enacted in his state of Texas. Petitioning to other men, he wrote, "Your sex life is at stake. Can you think of anything that kills the vibe faster than a woman fearing a back-alley abortion? Don't be surprised if casual sex outside of relationships becomes far more difficult to come by."

On the website Upworthy, writer, Rollie Williams praises Oregon as "the best state to have sex in" due to its nearly nonexistent abortion restrictions. "Oregon is the only state that has completely closed its borders to abortion restrictions. Pretty cool, Oregon," he remarks. He also criticizes Oklahoma for having the most abortion restrictions. His posting was originally titled, Why Oregon Just Became the Best State to Have Sex In, however the title has since been changed, most likely in an attempt to disguise his true motives.

Some of the most exploitive content comes from a blogger known only as "bacon" on the derogatory website ReturnofKings.com. He admits to having paid for more than one abortion in a piece called, How to Convince a Girl to Get an Abortion. His first approach is for the scenario where there's been a relationship longer than a one-night stand. He patronizes the woman with these remarks: "tell her you want her to be the mother of your children one day" (even if that's not true) and "if she has the abortion now, you will be able to plan your lives together so that everything is perfect." Then, after she agrees and has the abortion, he blatantly says, "Dump her." He calls it the "Hail Mary" because it's difficult to execute.

His second technique, he deems "The A-Hole Method." He suggests to, "channel your inner cold, unforgiving, unapologetic a-hole nature" and "tell her in no uncertain terms that you will not be a father to this child." His next step is to "get your car keys and drive her to the abortion clinic, pay for it and have her take care of it so you can both move on with your lives."

His last option adds further insult to injury. In the "Wildcard Method," the man is to say that his family carries a genetic disease. But he doesn't stop there. He goes as far as to recommend taking pictures of persons who are developmentally disabled and passing the person off as a relative. He concludes with, "If this advice helps just one man from becoming a parent against his will, it was worth the writeup."

There's no concern for women at all, nor the physical and emotional pain that comes from abortion. What's tragic is that these men who think abortion is the answer can actually sustain devastating harm as a result of abortion. Men experience significant guilt, grief and sadness, which oftentimes is repressed and can result in anger, aggressive behavior or substance abuse. Some may suffer from severe depression and think about or attempt suicide. Men's relationships also experience negative effects with increased conflict or lack of intimacy. In most cases, relationships will not survive an abortion experience. Consequently, the aftereffects of abortion continue into relationships with new partners. Many men may suffer from these symptoms, yet not acknowledge they are connected to an abortion in his past. The denial may exist for decades, hindering his ability to find healing.

The pro-choice movement and its despicable behavior backfired on pro-abortion supporters. Rather than advance their cause, it has exposed a dirty hidden truth—abortion-on-demand gives callous men the freedom to use women for sex and avoid any responsibility.

Message from Pastoral Director

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

A very special event occurs in the Church this month, with special meaning also for Rachel's Vineyard: the canonization of Saint John Paul II.

He is the Pope of Life, and through his promotion of the Divine Mercy devotion, he is the Pope of Mercy. He established that the Second Sunday of Easter be observed as Divine Mercy Sunday. This is the day on which the Gospel recounts the appearance of Jesus after the Resurrection in which he showed the disciples his wounds, pronounced "peace" on them, and then established the Sacrament of Reconciliation.

Amazingly, the Pope died on the vigil of Divine Mercy Sunday, in 2005.

And who can forget the powerful words of Evangelium Vitae in which he spoke directly to women who have had abortions, urging them to face honestly what they have done, and receive the gift of forgiveness as well as the expert help of others.

Is this not the vision that Rachel's Vineyard continues to fulfill throughout the world? Is it not the place where we face honestly what we have done? Is not the very presence of the Risen Lord, with his wounds of mercy and healing, as real on these retreats as it was on the first Easter?

Let us rejoice! And let us ask the intercession of Saint John Paul II as he continues to urge us to open wide the doors to Christ!

Blessings!
